Reform Jews Seek Huge Sums For Education

The executive body of American Reform Judaism adopted an intensified program of adult education for its 1,000,000 adherents in the United States and Canada. The action was taken by the board of trustees of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations at Temple Emanu-El, in New York.

At the same time, the Union, embracing 605 congregations in the Western Hemisphere, adopted a budget of $1,795,625, says the New York Times. The adult education program, as outlined by Emil N. Baar, former State Supreme Court justice, who is chairman of the board, calls for these steps:

Establishment of an academy of Jewish studies in every Reform temple. Development of a curriculum in theology, Bible, history, ethics, philosophy, ceremonies, customs, prayers, and Hebrew. Development of a training program in adult education for teachers. Appointment of a National Board of Adult Jewish Education to be composed of representatives of the Union and of the Central Conference of American Rabbis, the Reform Jewish rabbinic group.

Rabbi Jacob P. Rudin, leader of Temple Beth El, in Great Neck, L. I., was named chairman of the new education board by Rabbi Roland B. Gittlesohn, chairman of the Commission on Jewish Education of Reform Judaism. The program will be carried out by the Union's director of adult education, Dr. Chaim Essrog.

Rabbi Essrog said his department intended to limit the congregational classes to fifteen to twenty students to allow greater opportunities for personal instruction. Mr. Baar told the board that "adults today do not regard Jewish education as a bitter pill to be swallowed," but rather "are eager for it and are besieging us to increase our facilities."

He said Jews want so "to know more about their past and the moral concepts of their faiths, and if the temple is not in a position to supply the best kind of courses for adults, they will turn elsewhere for the enlightenment that it is our proper role to provide."

Mr. Baar called for intensified support of the Combined Campaign, which is seeking $3,185,000 to maintain programs conducted by the Union and the Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion, the training center for the Reform Rabbinate, says the New York Times. He emphasized that more than $1,000,000 was needed to meet the requirements of both institutions.

Mr. Baar added that "the success of the educational and other Union programs depends heavily on a much greater response by the Reform Jewish community to the annual fund raising drive of the Combined Campaign."

Find Letters Of Bar Kochba, 132 A.D., In Israel Cave

Israeli archaeologists discovered at least seven letters of Bar Kochba, the leader of the Jewish rebellion against the Romans from A. D. 132 to 135, during an expedition last April into remote caves in the Judean desert along the western shore of the Dead Sea. The expedition was the most extensive made in Israel.

The letters were found wrapped in a bundle, tied with thread and packed in a goatskin bag with several items for women — mirrors, spindles of woven wool, and a quantity of dyed but unwoven wool, says the New York Times. The bag had been hidden in a crevice in the innermost part of a deep cave in Wadi Haver, a ravine near En-gedi on the Israeli-Jordanian border.

Six of the letters that have been opened thus far are on papyrus and in remarkably good condition, preserved by the extreme dryness of the air. The seventh is on wood, probably sycamore.

Maj. Gen. Yigael Yadin, former Army Chief of Staff, who retired to be an archaeologist at the Hebrew University, led the unit of the expedition that came upon the letters. He said there might be three more letters in the bundle. The fragments are still being opened and pieced together.

Dr. Yadin did not include in his figure a document found in poor condition in the bundle, nor did he count two letters in Greek. Like the others, these were addressed to Jonathan, son of Bayan, who was perhaps Bar Kochba's second in command. But they did not come from Bar Kochba, whose letters are in Aramaic.

The letters comprise the biggest finding on Bar Kochba yet. Three were found in 1953 in Murabaat in Jordan, fifteen miles to the north. Two of the rebel leader's letters were published and are similar to the Israeli finds. The third letter, written to Bar Kochba, has not yet been published.

Dr. Yadin read the deciphered parts of the Israeli letters at the Jerusalem residence of President Itzhak Ben-Zvi. Premier David Ben-Gurion was there, as were most of leading political figures. Dr. Yadin said he assumed none of the letters had been written in Bar Kochba's hand, says the New York Times. The letters do not shed much new light on Bar Kochba. They were obviously written before his rebel band fled to the caves to hold out against the Romans, for the letters relay his commands to the people in the countryside and, in some cases, requisition their crops.

Simon Bar Kochba (also spelled Cocheba, Coziba, Kokba, and Cochba) was leader of the last revolt of the Israelites against the Roman Empire. The hopeless uprising was touched off by the effort of Emperor Hadrian to suppress the Jewish religion. Bar Kochba held some important towns for a time, but the Roman general Julius Severus defeated his troops and finally killed Bar Kochba at Bether.

Argentina Would Give Up Nazi Criminals On "Legal Proof"

President Arturo Frondisi, of Argentina, promised that his nation would deliver suspected criminals to their accusers abroad if legally convinced "proof" of misdeeds was presented. Dr. Frondizi indicated that this procedure could be followed without the benefit of a formal extradition treaty, says the New York Times. The policy statement is highly pertinent to West Germany, which has no extradition treaty with Argentina. Law-enforcement agencies are trying to lay their hands on a number of Nazi officials now residing in Argentina.

The extradition statement was one of two significant policy positions taken by the Argentine President at a news conference during his four-day official visit to West Germany. He also demanded a voice in international economic councils. He declared that Latin American countries would cease to support the political aims of the industrialized nations of Western Europe and North America if their economic needs were ignored.

In the situation of refugee Nazis, Dr. Frondisi is reported to have yielded to the urging of Chancellor Adenauer that the two Governments start work on an extradition treaty. Argentina had long ignored Bonn's bid for negotiations, first made in 1953.

Informed sources said that the Argentine leader also had agreed to consider the extradition of Josef Mengele, who was a Nazi physician at the Oswiecim (Auschwitz) concentration camp, without waiting for the treaty to be concluded. Mengele, a former colonel, stands high on a list of about 1,000 Third Reich officials against whom charges of murder or manslaughter have been laid.

At his news conference, Dr. Frondizi extended his reported position in the Mengele case to apply to any "proven" criminal who had found haven in Argentina, says the New York Times.

"Governments that ask for extradition of an accused person must show proof according to our laws," Dr. Frondizi said. "When all requirements of our judicial system are fulfilled, then extradition will be approved by the courts and it will be carried out with dispatch by the executive."

U.J.A. Raised Over $33 Million, Midyear Sum

The United Jewish Appeal has raised $33,150,000 this year to meet the needs of Jews the world over and especially among Israel's immigrants. The sum was reached as 450 leaders presented checks, representing large contributions from their community campaigns, to Melvyn Dubinsky, of St. Louis, Missouri, the national cash chairman, at the leadership conference at the Shoreham Hotel, in Washington, D.C.

Rabbi Herbert A. Friedman, the executive vice chairman, hailed the midyear sum as "remarkable." He noted that the 1960 campaign was the first in the Appeal's twenty-two-year history "unmarked by an immigration crisis in Israel or a massive emergency in Jewish life abroad."

The Appeal's executive head said that "if the campaign continues at the present pace, there is every reason to believe that by the year's end the drive will approximate the $88,000,000 raised by the Appeal in its successful campaign of 1959."

Although the Appeal has no fixed goal, it seeks to raise the largest possible sums for Jewish needs, says the New York Times. Among its beneficiaries is the United Israel Appeal, which provides funds to the Jewish Agency for Israel to carry out programs of rehabilitation among newcomers to Israel. Others are the Joint Distribution Committee, which aids needy Jews throughout the world and has special programs in Israel; and the New York Association for New Americans, which takes care of Jewish refugees to the U.S.

Jewry Suffers Loss By Untimely Death Of Detroit Leader

Boris M. Joffe, a prominent civic figure and a leader in the Jewish community, of Detroit, Mich., died at Sinai Hospital there of cancer. He was 67 years old.

Mr. Joffe had been executive director of the Jewish Community Council of Metropolitan Detroit, the central body of 400 Jewish organizations in the area, for the last eleven years. He had won numerous honors for promoting civil rights and defending religious freedom, says the New York Times. He had been active in attempting to have Congress ease the United States immigration laws and amend the McCarran-Walter Act.

Before coming to Detroit, Mr. Joffe had served as executive director of the National Wage Stabilization Board and director of administrative management with the National War Labor Board in Washington. He had also been assistant secretary for overseas operations of the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee.

Five years ago Mr. Joffe was cited by the Workman's Circle in Detroit for "distinguished service to the community." Last year 500 of his friends gathered at Temple Israel to honor him upon his tenth anniversary with the Jewish Community Council. At that time Rabbi Morris Adler cited Mr. Joffe as "important in the advancement of the democratic principles on which our country was founded."

A native of Russia, Mr. Joffe served as a youth in a Russian army that fought the Bolsheviks and the Mensheviks in an effort to establish a democracy in Russia. He was a graduate of the Far Eastern Imperial University in Vladivostok, Russia, and had taught at Stanford University in California, and the American University, in Washington, D.C.

Mr. Joffe was on the executive committee of the National Community Relations Advisory Council, the cordinating body of forty-one Jewish community relations organizations, says the New York Times.

He had recently completed a two-year term on the executive

World Zionist Or[illegible]n Reform Will Give [illegible]Movement New Lease On Life

Jews who support Israel but are not organized in the Zionist movement are to receive a voice in shaping Zionist policies, in a reform designed to revitalize the World Zionist Organization that piloted Israel to statehood but has been foundering since the goal was reached in 1948, says the New York Times. The decision to give the organization a new lease on life was taken in June at a joint meeting of the Israeli Government and the Jewish Agency, the executive branch of the Zionist Organization.

It represents a setback for Premier David Ben-Gurion, who had argued that the organization should be regarded as scaffolding that is dismantled when the building is completed. Mr. Ben-Gurion had been supported by the Foreign Minister, Mrs. Golda Meir, but they are in a minority in the Cabinet and in the central committee of their party, Mapai. The majority view is that a strengthened Zionist organization would be a useful instrument for the unification of Jews behind Israel. It was decided, accordingly, to broaden the base of the movement.

Dr. Nahum Goldmann, president of the World Zionist Organization, told the New York Times that the forthcoming Zionist Congress would be attended by associate members and fraternal delegations from representative bodies of Jewish communities in Europe and Latin America. Some major U. S. Jewish organizations are to send representatives. These groups will participate in the discussions but will not vote.

Organized Zionists have been a minority among Jews supporting Israel. Affiliation with the organization has been on an individual basis through membership in local Zionist groups.

Most of these groups have been identified with political parties in Israel, and many Jews have balked at joining them. Consequently a large number of Jews who feel a deep attachment to Israel are technically non-Zionists. Last year the World Zionist Organization amended its constitution to permit non-Zionist groups that support its program to obtain representation in the parliamentary and executive bodies.

Action to enlarge the organization follows a decade of reappraisal of the functions and status of the movement. Before Israel was established, Palestinian Jews and Zionists abroad had equal voices. When Israel was established, the Palestinians slipped into Cabinet posts and took decisions without consulting their erstwhile colleagues abroad.

Some felt slighted. They were further offended when Mr. Ben-Gurion said, "Zionism is bankrupt." The Premier was disenchanted with leaders of the movement because so few had come to live in

Germans And Jews

BY PROF. HELMUT GOLLWITZER

In front of the airport in Lydda a crowd of people stood waiting. When I came out and witnessed the passionate welcomes, the tumult of affectionate joy of reunion, it flashed through me: "All these are survivors, escapees." And my mind brought back the counter part, those heart-rending farewells on the platforms of Berlin railway stations, where families, spouses, parents, and children separated so that at least some of them could be saved from the murder. The German above all others has cause to have this constantly in mind when he has to deal with the state of Israel or Jews generally.

If that leadership which our people had hailed so enthusiastically for many years, had had its way, all these would be no more among the living; far beyond the borders of Germany, in all their various countries of abode they should have been destroyed by waves of persecution and mankind rid of them as if of vermin; and if our highly-praised Rommel had succeeded in breaking through at El Alamein, Palestine, too, would have been turned into a slaughterhouse. Apart from some very few of us it is not our merit that these people here are still alive.

As far as we did not lend a hand, we at least looked on — or perhaps looked away; but we did not throw ourselves into the path of this murder that was done in our name, because our own survival was more important to us than the survival of these people, and because many of us were prepared, if Adolf Hitler only led us to victory, to murder the few million Jews to the gratification of his personal amusement, even if we ourselves were too well brought up to approve the atrocities connected with it.

The latent anti-Semitism that was a normal component part of the spiritual equipment of our bourgeoisie, the centuries-old contempt in which the Jews were held by Christianity, these were the hotbed in which this spirit of murder was born; and nobody better than Christians should have known, from the Sermon of the Mount, that he who despises his brother sows the seeds of murder which one day will bear fruit.

It must be clear to every German who visits Israel: every Jew who is alive today is alive not because of us, but in spite of us. At home we succeed in stifling this knowledge: we are firmly determined to live as well as possible on the mass graves of six million Jews.

But when one visits Israel, one cannot gloss over it; one must tear open wounds or suffer wounds where none have been so far. In our own country one can come across people who are amazed, or even indignant, that Israel still places an embargo on German tourists: one should be able to forget some time, one of these told me recently.

This amazement alone is sufficient indication of how necessary the present embargo still is. May it please God that we don't forget — that perhaps would help those over there a little to forget in their turn. Israel should certainly be visited only by those Germans who have not forgotten, who are constantly aware of the fact: All these have survived, despite of us, despite of me!

And yet, we find no hatred in Israel. From many of my experiences in the years of persecution I have formed the impression that "the Jew" (if such questionable generalisation, which has done so much harm, may be permitted for the moment), is less capable of hatred than most other peoples. This I have found confirmed over there. Whoever has no Hebrew and but little English can easily manage to get through the country with German and will never experience an ugly scene — though he may occasionally meet with perplexed reticence and cautious inquiry as to his antecedents.

It was deeply moving to listen to a small circle of German Jews; when they told, one after the other in almost identical words, how they, never quite weaned of their nostalgia for Germany, had, on re-visiting it, found it a foreign country. "All the people there were to me as though behind an insurmountable wall", said a lawyer from Cologne, sadly; and was violently seconded by one from Berlin: "I was incapable of distinguishing between such Germans — to me they all were as though branded."

We had branded them, and now we are branded! All this was said in the course of a conversation as between old friends, and in the tone of lasting grief for a shattered love. There, amid the people who still bear the brands of the concentration camps on their bodies, who are often the sole survivors of their whole kith and kin, the German who loves his people has no chance to dissociate himself from the others as an allegedly better German; he can only accept the guilt of his people, he cannot even ask for forgiveness and forgetting: all he can do is to wait till a new outlook on Germany is possible from there, and he will be thankful that here, too, time exerts its calming influence.

The youth on both sides will find it easier to find bridges to each other, especially as the Israeli youth lives so much in the present and the future that, if anything, they are too little interested in the sufferings of their fathers in the Galuth.

I may here insert a word on the official relations between Israel and the Federal Republic. When one sees, everywhere in Israel, machinery, railway carriages and other material from the German restitution deliveries, one is grateful, as a German, to the Federal Government and the Chancellor that, against resistance from many quarters, the reparations agreement was carried through. Rarely has money from our tax payments (the total sum, spread over 14 years, is roughly one-third of our present annual armament budget) been so usefully spent, and over there each delivery is used to the best advantage for the peaceful building up of the country.

What has happened can only be forgiven, never made good, and least of all with money and material; but money and material can function as bridges for a new co-existence, and in this respect, as creating a new relationship between Germans and Jews, the decision of the Government has achieved something absolutely indispensable.

Unfortunately, the next step due has not yet been made: the beginning of diplomatic relations, for which Israel would be prepared to-day. In Israel one understands and appreciates the reason that prevents Bonn from taking this step: the fear that the Arab states would react to this development with the spiteful recognition of the DDR Government. This is not the place to argue this matter, but so much may be said:

To have diplomatic relations with a state recognised by the United Nations and having normal exchanges of envoys with the countries of the West as well as of the East should be such a foregone conclusion that it cannot be permanently ignored because of the entirely unjustified hostile reactions of third parties; and after all that has happened between Germans and Jews, a German Government should rather risk certain disadvantages than keep the Jewish state waiting when it is ready for normal diplomatic relations.

And here a short word may also not be out of place on the enmity of the Arabs against the state of Israel: In Israel there is no enmity against the Arabs, no aggressive intentions, but only the general desire for peace. One does not suffer only under the Arab threat of destruction, which involves the maintenance of an expensive army, but also under the enmity itself. So far Israel's hand of friendship has always been rejected, and whoever of the Arab politicians may be inclined to take it, must be careful not to say so in public, unless he is to pay for doing so with his own life, like King Abdulah of Jordan in 1951.

The by-stander, however, who can only wish for this danger spot in world politics to disappear, may well ask how long it will take the Arab peoples to realise their true interest when looking at Palestine; i.e. how long it will take them to understand that it cannot be in their interest to regard this small, but so well-organised state as an irritating foreign body and rapacious intruder; how long it will take till they see at last that even to the Arab peoples, in their present revolution from the Middle Ages to the 20th century the establishment of Israel offers a chance.

They would have to make up their minds to forget all questions of past right and wrong and to begin looking forward. In the event of an Arab victory over Israel, not a single one of the real problems of the Arab peoples will be solved or at least nearer a solution; but a reconciliation with Israel would mean the integration of an extremely valuable partner in the structure of the Middle East. Whether somebody really means well by the Arab peoples can be judged by his approval and promotion of conciliation with Israel.

The third factor which makes Israel concern us so directly can only be mentioned although it cannot be separated from the other two — the model social structure of Israel in contrast to all forms of restoration, and the guilt of the non-Jews, the Germans especially, vis-a-vis this much persecuted people, which necessitated the establishment of the state of Israel. This factor, actually the most important one, consists in Israel's being Israel. According to the most likely etymological derivation, the name means "God rules".

Here is the people whose quite unheard-of, incomparable fate right through to the present day has originated with a relation to God which it cannot end even if it should so wish, and which determines its fate and its character. Israel is the theological people. He who overlooks this understands nothing of what to-day is happening in Israel. Those concerned with Israel must needs become theologists.

It was this people from which a message went out to the world, and this message does not consist merely in some religious and moral ideas, but in the history itself that was the lot of this people from the days of Abraham to the Apostles; and it is therefore of the highest importance to Mankind, to whom this message went out, that the "Chosen People" and the Promised Land have once again found one another.

This is so real and at the same time so completely foreign to our present way of thinking that one should deal with it in great detail, and it is perhaps better just to mention this aspect than to deal with it inadequately. This, however, must be said: that even the establishment of the state which we commemorate here, would have been unthinkable without this theological character of Jewish existence; that, in fact, it is based on it.

In stories about the Arab-Jewish war of ten years ago, which led to the foundation of the state, people are inclined to say that they beat the superior Arab forces only thanks to a secret weapon, the secret weapon, "Aleph Bet". These are the initial letters of the Hebrew words Ain Brera — in English "no way out". Because they had their backs to the sea and had no other choice, they so heroically fought with the courage born of desperation. But this motto does not govern that struggle alone; it governs the whole of Jewish fate.

Israel is the people that, because it is chosen, has no choice. It is for this reason that assimilation failed; they had to remain Jews and could not escape the fate of being Jews. It is for this reason that they could not choose Argentine or Uganda to settle; they had to go there, to the Promised Land and accept the risks this involved and the trouble, conflict, and danger it has entailed to the present day. It is for this reason they could not introduce English or Arabic as the language of the country, but had to revive Hebrew, regardless of the discomforts this entailed not only for the visitor, but also for themselves.

And it is for this reason that the controversy between the Orthodox section of the population and the religiously emancipated majority in regard to the validity of the traditional law touches on the foundations of the state and yet cannot be avoided; can, in my opinion, be superseded only by a religious reformation that goes deeper than mere reform. Ain Brera, they have no choice, they are not like other peoples, they are and they shall remain the people of the manifestation of God.

In the proclamation of the new state, of May 14, 1948, it is said: "It is the natural right of the Jewish people to lead a life just like every other sovereign people." That they can now do so, of that we are glad. The peoples with whom they lived in exile, first forced the twist of the Ghetto upon them and then blamed them and despised them for displaying this twist. Now they can live and work as free human beings in their own commonwealth, as upright, normal people just like others.

May no people take the heavy guilt upon itself once again to deprive them of this; and we all have to make it our business that this be left to them. It is not a matter of idealising them. It is not a matter of replacing a blind anti-Semitism with an equally blind philo-Semitism. If a report on present-day Israel sounds, for good and sufficient reasons, somewhat enthusiastic, it is not meant to gloss over the enormous problems that originated with the establishment of the state and with which it is burdened, the internal and external frictions, the share in the guilt for the enmity of the Arabs (which, by the way, is very seriously discussed in Israel) the defects and shortcomings.

To-day, however, on a day of celebration, they may be allowed to recede to the background. Part of Jewry has now achieved being allowed to live like other people. In the Scriptures of Jewry, the Old Testament, however, it is just this desire which in several passages is regarded as extremely questionable, as a wish to escape from the burden of God, which is the distinction of this people.

Even in its new existence this people will prove that it may live like other people only when it is aware that it is not like other people, that it has a special task for all others ever since the Voice said to Abraham: I shall bless you and with your name all generations on earth shall be blessed.

It is from Israel then that a blessing shall come for all of us. Blessing is a word alien to the political history of peoples. But what we might have learnt at least is that guilt and curse are historical realities. In the same way blessing is something real and necessary among the peoples. Israel has its unresignable special task, because it is from there that a blessing shall go out to all the peoples. The responsibility of Israel is great. Our responsibility is great; for to that which Israel is meant to be to the other peoples, we can contribute from our side.

They above all who know that in the Church they have grown together with Israel into one olive tree, as Paul puts it, cannot regard this as an idea alien to them. Thus it is that this Israel concerns all of us and that we all have cause to speak in the direction of Palestine: Shalom, Shalom, Shalom Israel.

WORLD ZIONIST ORGANIZATION REFORM

his country after the establishment of Israel.

For several years Dr. Goldmann has been the chief advocate of the admission of non-Zionist Jewish groups into the world Zionist movement, says the New York Times. In June, 1959, the Zionist Action Committee, meeting in Jerusalem, adopted a resolution calling for a revision in the movement's constitution that would allow such membership.

Later at a news conference in New York, Dr. Goldmann explained that the entry of non-Zionist groups would intensify world-wide moral and financial support for Israel. The United Synagogue of America, the congregational arm of Conservative Judaism, at its meeting last year, tabled until 1961 the issue whether it would affiliate with the World Zionist Organization. There are no indications yet which non-Zionist groups will send representatives to the world congress.

THE SEA CREST BRINGS OUT THE FRIENDLY NEIGHBOR IN YOU
People confuse us. A man will live three houses from his neighbor (or in an apartment on the same floor)...their total contribution to neighborliness will be a grunted greeting and an observation on the weather. Let these same two check into the Sea Crest...they'll Talk a storm. We Saw This Happen...
Two gentlemen were treading water a few yards from shore while their families relaxed in beach chairs. We overheard... "you know, I've been everywhere but never swam in water like this...it's tepid yet it tingles...it's warm yet it exhilerates... On coming out of the water one turned to us to say..."you know that fellow lives down the street from me...we said more to one another in the few minutes we were in the water than we've done in the ten years we've been neighbors"...
Come to the Cape • The Sea Crest will bring out the friend of your neighbor in you. You'll want to Stay and Stay-by-the-Sea on-the-Sand Under-the-Stars of Old Silver Beach on Captivating Cape Cod.

The Need Of A Revitalized Zionist Movement

BY DR. MORRIS A. LANDES, RABBI OF CONGREGATION ADATH JESHURUN, OF PITTSBURGH, PA.; MEMBER OF THE NATIONAL EXECUTIVE COUNCIL OF THE ZIONIST ORGANIZATION OF AMERICA; AND OF THE NATIONAL EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE RABBINICAL COUNCIL OF AMERICA

"Raze it, raze it, even to its very foundation." As we prepare for the 63rd annual convention of the Zionist Organization of America, we hear once again that ancient refrain quoted by the Psalmist. For twelve years, we have been hearing it chanted by the Arab overlords in regard to the State of Israel. And for twelve years now, we have heard it repeated in Israel and outside in regard to the Zionist Movement. "The State is here. Why then do we need a Zionist Movement?"

Just recently, the Prime Minister of Israel has taken up once more what for him is a too familiar chorus. He has likened the Zionist Movement to the scaffolding used in the construction of a building. Now that the building, the Jewish State, is up, it is about time to raze the scaffolding. But, is that really so? Did Herzl and the Zionists who preceded him and those who followed him, did they labor only with inanimate lumber and metal to fashion a temporary structure? Perhaps there are some in Israel who would prefer to think so, at least in regard to the contemporary scene, who look upon the Jew outside Medinat Yisrael as some sort of impersonal cash register, which has no thoughts or mind of its own but is there solely to respond when you push the button and ring the bell, and make available the hard currency.

The Zionist Movement is a thing of flesh and blood, a living entity, fashioned by the ideas and inspirations of dedicated, gifted individuals. A living thing is not cast aside because it has borne another life. Quite the contrary. If at twelve years old, the Medina, a feminine noun, and therefore under the rules governing girls, considers itself a Bas Onshin or a Bas Mitzvah, already mature and prepared to strike out on its own, then let it remember that in the complex age in which we live, a child of twelve cast off by its parents is truly in a sorry situation. The twelve year old "adult" can still profit by the counsel and assistance of those who give her life.

Security, protection, she still needs. Let a Kibya incident or a Sinai campaign spring up. What guarantee do we have that "the friends of Israel" will not desert her? Who was it then that rallied public opinion and sentiment in Congress to Israel's side? Who is prepared to do it again, though all others may forsake? Everybody will love Israel when she is clean, who will love her when she seems to be dirty? The Zionist, especially the Zionist, perhaps only the Zionist.

And when there are no crises, who will do the ongoing work, the daily task of presenting Israel's ideals and point of view to the rest of the world? Again, the answer is the same. The Zionist, especially the Zionist. Herzl knew this well, when he observed, decades ago that even after the state is established, there will still be a need for a Zionist Movement, for the work of that movement is not just to build a state but to regenerate a people.

If the Zionist believes that we are all one people, one body Judaica, then every part of that body is precious, whether it be in Israel or outside. True, for the Zionist, Israel is the pulsing heart of that body, but what good is a heart without the rest of the organs? If the heart contributes much to the health and vitality of the rest of the body, so does the heart derive sustenance from all the limbs. A body with a limb severed is a crippled body. Amputate an organ as vital as the Zionist Movement, and the entire body is in jeopardy.

If there were no Zionist Movement today, we would have to create one for the sake of the health of Israel and of the Jewish people. And if the movement may be weak for the moment, the proper diagnosis is not radical surgery but rather rejuvenating the movement so that it may function with all its former health. There is much life-blood which Israel can pump into the body of the Jewish people to revitalize it. For the first time in 2000 years, we are actively making history, not just passively reacting to persecutions of the nations around us. Can we measure how much that fact of itself is doing to straighten the backbone and lift the head of the Jew everywhere?

For too long, the Jew has been influenced, even in his most sacred areas, by the culture of the majority peoples among whom he dwelt. For the Jew in America, two Christian holidays, Christmas and Easter, do infinitely more to shape his life than any Jewish festival. His whole economic existence often depends on the gentile holidays.

Go to Italy. See the large synagogue in Rome. Observe the main ark of that synagogue and on either side of that ark, moved a bit inward, two smaller arks. And you wonder, why three arks in one sanctuary? Then, you begin to realize that the synagogue architecture has been modelled after that of the church. Well, in a church it is appropriate to have the sign of the cross in its structural design.

And examine carefully many of the innovations made in Jewish religious practice here in America and decide how many of them have been determined by a conscious or subconscious desire to ape Christian practice. Even our theology. How much does the current popularity of Existentialism in Jewish circles derive from the influence of the stress on Neo-Orthodoxy found in current Protestantism? And is not that philosophy as such more germane to Christianity than to Judaism? Judaism with its rationalistic basis, where does it come to "leaps of faith"?

Even our "Return to Religion," the mushrooming of synagogues and of synagogue membership, is it really a "Return" or is it another example of imitating our neighbors?

Against all this, Israel can be the steadying force. There, the Jewish culture is the majority culture. There, Jewish life will develop on intrinsically Jewish lines. There, the problem of the Jewish parent is not what to do with Christmas, but of the Christian parent in regard to Chanukah. There, the Jewish child will make "charoses" for a Seder rather than paint eggs for Easter. He will deck a "succah" rather than adorn a Christmas tree. He will wear a false face on Purim, not Hallowe'en. And the new values and practices which will perforce spring up will be based on Jewish ideals and customs, not on those of others. These will permeate over to the lands beyond the sea, giving added dignity and vigor to Judaism everywhere.

But there must be arteries through which the purified blood of Judaism and Jewish culture can flow. One of the major arteries has been and will be the Zionist Movement. The Zionist has a special stake in this activity, because of his philosophy and his "weltanshauung." If this writer's city of Pittsburgh is any criterion, then it is the Zionist who "pushes" books on Israel and from Israel. It is he who stresses the sale of Israel art objects, and for that matter, of Israel products in general and of investments in Israel, and it is he who is usually the backbone and the most arduous worker for Israel Bonds and the U.J.A.

Is the study of Hebrew vital to the spreading of Israel culture? Then, in Pittsburgh it was the Zionist District which at great cost to itself sponsored weekly television programs aimed at teaching the Hebrew language. Nor is this flow one way. Blood flows to the heart as well as from the heart. True, on the cultural level, Israel has more to give to the Diaspora than to gain from it. Yet gain there is.

Surrounded by Arab countries, Israel may well become just another Levantine state, if it were not for its contacts with World Jewry. It is well to develop groups like the Inbal dancers and to insert Oriental motifs into the music of Israel, but Western forms ought not to be neglected either. Here, the Zionist Movement has its role to play.

In the area of sensitivity to the feelings of others, the Diaspora Jew through the Zionist Movement has much to teach. Perhaps the "sabra" (native Israeli) needs a bit of polish and softening so that he is not quite so hard on the outside. Living amidst other cultures, the Diaspora Jew must perforce be cognizant of how his actions and his attitude may affect his neighbor. Perhaps there is too much obsession with this among American Jews. However, it would not harm for some of this at least to rub off on the Israeli. Then, perhaps even a Prime Minister of Israel will think twice before making pronouncements on the Bible which might shock the sensibilities of many people.

No, the Zionist Movement needs strengthening, not razing. It is true that with the advent of the state, the movement has entered into a new phase. Heretofore, its major energies had been expended in bringing the state into being. Even now, it is mostly concerned with protecting and securing its young offspring. However, for the long view, there must be a re-examination of the goals and purposes of the Zionist Movement so that it may continue to be the vital, vigorous force it was always meant to be. In this regard, the recent committee to evaluate the aims of the ZOA, headed, by Dr. Mordecai M. Kaplan, was a step in the right direction. To this writer's mind, the major failing of that committee and the reason for its not getting off the ground were the fact that it was too much under the influence of one point of view, no matter how brilliant the exponents of that view are. Just as Judaism is more than Reconstructionism, so Zionism dare not let itself be wagged solely by the Reconstructionist tail.

Be that as it may. One of the major tasks which will present itself to the coming Zionist convention will be the revitalization of the Zionist Movement and the re-affirmation and revaluation of Zionist principles.

"Raze it, raze it, even to its very foundations?" Hardly. Revitalize. Reinvigorate. For the sake of the State of Israel and for the sake of the entire Jewish People.
